What Does It Mean To Be In Service To Your Purpose?

When you are in service to your purpose, you feel fulfilled. It's fun. You feel playful. You feel like you have a ton of energy and even more to spare.

You feel like you are making a difference. More importantly, you feel that you are having a positive impact in your world in a way that is unique to you. Your service to your calling weaves together your experiences, your skills, your special gifts and talents, your perspectives on the world, and so much more.

It's important to underscore the word "positive," in my view. It's my belief that each one of us are born with an instruction set within us to make a positive impact in the world.

Whether we choose to do so is a different issue. This ties into free will and how we choose to exercise our free will – whether to make a positive or negative impact.

How are you choosing to use your free will to align with the life purpose instruction set that you were born with?

How Did I Align With My Life Purpose?

By Gisele Thomson

When I was going through what some call the dark night of the soul, I accepted the calling to be "a bridge, a light and a healer," – as I heard and understood the words of the insight that came to me. But I had no clue what that meant, nor what I was supposed to do.

I received an additional insight that helped shift my perspective. It also eliminated a lot of stress and overwhelm I was feeling. Simply put: "Just show up and write. Every day. The people who need to read the words that you will write will find their way to them." I could do that. I love to write.

What do you feel your calling might be?
